Host: Welcome back to our programme. Today we have Dr. Green, an expert on urban development.

Host: Dr. Green, many people are moving from rural areas to the city centre. Why?

Green: Well, the main reason is jobs. Industry and tourism create more work in the city.

Host: But cities are getting very crowded, are not they?

Green: That is true. The population is growing fast, and we need more housing and better transport.

Host: What about the suburbs?

Green: Suburbs are growing too, but many workers still travel into the city every day, which creates heavy traffic.

Host: So what is the solution?

Green: We need better public transport, more green space, and cleaner factories.

Host: And what about the environment?

Green: We must reduce pollution and protect the countryside around our cities.

Host: Thank you, Dr. Green, for sharing your views.

Let me continue our talk about the city. The outskirt of the city is quieter, and the city centre is busy with shops and offices.

High rises stand in the business block, and the old town keeps its origin and landscape.

Long ago, craftsmen, carpenters, fishermen, hunters and merchants lived here, and forestry, fishing, manufacturing and mining were the main work.

The aboriginal people were the native people of the land, and the aborigines left rock art on the mountains.

Near the peak, the altitude is high and the air is thin, and the vegetation is different from the valley.

A square metre of land costs more in the centre, and a hectare or an acre is used on farms.

You can see an old fort, a castle and a canal, and the heritage site is intact and protected.

Please do not touch the ancient walls, and take shots only at a distance, to keep the sanctuary safe.

We measure the area in square metres and kilometres, and the peak season attracts many visitors.

One more view of the city. The construction of new buildings never stops, and the expansion of the airport brings more visitors.

A historical museum, a sculpture park and a painting gallery are open all year.

The international airport is east of the city, and domestic flights serve the whole country.
